US Citizenship

Green card marriages have become very common today. This is because marrying a citizen of the United States is the easiest and quickest way of becoming a citizen of the country. But that does not mean that you will receive the card so simply. There are several steps to go through and to take care of. The process involves a number of steps starting from filling out a number of forms, taking care of the legal issues, keeping a record of the receipts, filings, and supporting materials, having the government correspondence, and then finally the interview. The entire process is actually very time-consuming because it takes a lot to submit all the right documents and after every step, you will have to wait for the response and notices. Preparing the supporting materials can also take a lot of time. Birth certificate, tax returns, medical exam, passport, pay stubs, job letter, marriage certificate, criminal records, and divorce decree are some of the important documents that you will be required to submit.

There are a number of things you must keep in mind when you apply for a green card based on your marriage. For one, the marriage must be real. There have been many cases relating to marriage for green card solely. Marriage fraud is a very serious issue because of which you could be sent to jail for ten years along with a heavy fine. A medical exam is an absolute must for you. Your spouse, who is the citizen of U.S, will need to submit an affidavit showing support towards you for a particular period of time and under some circumstances. The income requirements are also a very serious criterion to be met. If your spouse in the U.S does not meet these requirements, you will need a joint sponsor.

The validity of your marriage will be checked thoroughly. Both of you will need to attend the interview and prove that your marriage is valid. Alongside, you have to also prove that the foreign spouse is eligible for the green card. You will need to submit bona fides that prove that your marriage is real. Joint credit card, photos, joint lease, joint bank accounts, or information is supporting the fact that you live together will come handy.

It is very important to find an experienced legal counsel to be able to go through the entire process smoothly.

http://green-card-marriages.com